Jack Mallory - A Patriot

As Chairman of the Social Events Committee, and as a member of the SVSAR Scholarship Committee, Compatriot Jack has provided critical leadership over the past several years to the SVSAR Chapter by creating and organizing the chapter's social/fundraising events. The success of these social/fundraising events has improved the financial condition of the chapter from a deficit of funds several years ago to a major surplus of funds today. This financial improvement has enabled the chapter to fund its unique and extraordinary SVSAR Scholarship program at De Anza College.

Even more impressive is Compatriot Jack's patriotic community service. Above is a photograph of Compatriot Jack presiding over the Independence Day Observance festivities in 2006 at Azule Park in Saratoga.

Over the past six years, Compatriot Jack has created, organized and led the Independence Day Observances in Saratoga, California. The first Independence Day Observance was held on his driveway in 2002. The following four Independence Day Observances were held at Azule Park in Saratoga. This sixth Independence Day Observance will be in 2007, and will be another success with an estimated attendance of over 700 people. This is a 100% volunteer effort!

The Event Announcement and the Event Program are beautifully done. The event will be photographed and videotaped by the Saratoga Chamber of Commerce, which will place the photographs of the event on their website and will sell DVDs of the event. The local newspaper, The Saratoga News, will also cover the event. In the past Compatriot Jack has received many heartfelt verbal and written commendations for his patriotic service to his community.

The Silicon Valley Chapter is fortunate to count Compatriot Jack Mallory as one of its members.

He was preparing for the invasion of Japan when World War II ended.

Guest Speaker

On the next page is a photograph of Master Sergeant Reinold (Rey) Pagan, USMCR, speaking to the SVSAR Membership about "My Experiences as an instructor for the Iraqi police forces". Officer Pagan is now a law enforcement officer in the Central Valley and a member of the Marine Corps Reserve.

Officer Pagan recently returned from a third tour of duty in Iraq. He kept the membership spellbound as he recounted his experiences as an Iraqi police instructor, and his impressions of Iraq, its people, and the progress of the war.

Last Chapter Meeting - May 19, 2007

The membership was unanimous in their impression that Officer Pagan is an example of America's finest. Listed below is an NBC News article about Officer Pagan.

School Kids Learn a Lesson about Sacrifice

By James Hattori
Correspondent, NBC News
November 17, 2006, Manteca, California

Just a month ago, Marine Master Sergeant Rey Pagan was seizing and destroying enemy weapons in Iraq's Anbar province. This week, he was welcomed home by the Manteca, California, school board. "There is no way to say thank you to all of you," he said.

Pagan's thanks went especially to Woodward Elementary School, where students last spring gathered donations to send to Pagan and his fellow Marines.

"Shampoo, powdered Gatorade, wipes - all kinds of stuff," remembers school clerk Debie McLarty. "Anything you could think of, they brought in. It was crazy."

Pagan and his Marines thanked the kids by recording a playful video, surrounded by their bounty, taped right in their barracks. "Thanks, guys, for all the candy, all the food you sent us," says Pagan on the tape. "All the guys thank you."

Pagan now says the gifts were a big lift, coming the same week that two of his Marines were badly wounded. "We were bombed and mortared and rocketed on a daily basis," he says. "It meant a lot to them that it wasn't all the bad news that we were hearing."

It was a lift, too, for Pagan's 9-year-old son Rey Jr., a student at Woodward, who sorely missed his father. "He stood quite a bit taller," remembers teacher Michelle Crippen, "and really proud of his dad."

Today, after deployments lasting three of the last four years, Pagan and his wife Silvia are focused on just being home. "I think you appreciate life and family much more," says Silvia. "I appreciate the life in this country a lot more," adds Pagan.

While students at Woodward Elementary got a hometown lesson about sacrifice and answering the nation's call.

The American Revolution - Month by Month

Written by
Compatriot Andrew Jackson Stough, III

March of 1775

“There is no retreat but in submission and slavery!
Our chains are forged.

Their clanking may be heard on the plains of Boston!
The war is inevitable, and let it come!
I repeat it, sir, let it come!”

Patrick Henry

On the floor of the Virginia House of Burgesses, March 1775.

As spring unfolded from the harshness of winter to sunny days of spring so, did the voice of resisters to any further reconciliation with the mother country. New England and particularly Boston town continued to denounce the government of King George III. The “Sons of Liberty” had for the most part risen above their roots of harassment to include such distinguished figures as Dr. Joseph Warren and John Adams who spoke on a higher plane. Sam Adams remained, but he was now less the rabble rouser than the supporter of a more dignified approach, which if it was not already rebellion, then it would soon become so.

Benjamin Franklin, who had lived in London for some time and had been conciliatory towards some rapprochement with King and Parliament, abruptly changed his attitude after the old and ailing William Pitt, Earl of Chatham, had been shamefully treated and Franklin had been besmirched in the House of Lords. William Pitt presented a bill that would have likely satisfied the colonies and averted the war. As William Pitt sat after his speech, Lord Sandwich rose immediately, accusing William Pitt of treasonous words, which he insinuated were probably prepared by Dr. Franklin whom he pointed out in the audience. William Pitt had prepared his own speech, but now both he and Benjamin Franklin were maligned. As William Pitt relinquished the floor it appeared that the Lords would overwhelmingly adopt his bill. However, as a result of Lord Sandwich’s rebuttal speech, William Pitt’s bill was rejected two to one. At that point Benjamin Franklin realized that he would no longer be effective as a mediator, and his support shifted to the side of the militants in the colonial Congress. Faced with the lack of any consideration by Parliament, and upon hearing of the death of his wife, Deborah, in Philadelphia, Benjamin Franklin realized that his work was finished in London and decided that it was time to go home.

The King and his advisors were now faced in Congress with such men as Benjamin Franklin, John Adams, Thomas Jefferson, Richard Henry Lee, and the firebrand, Patrick Henry. Thomas Paine, noted as a rebel against established governments, was an Englishman who, because of the colonial problem, had immigrated to America. Thomas Paine was not considered a great author, but one who wrote in a language and terms that roused men against the corruption of governments. Nor was Thomas Paine the only one calling for overthrow of the current government. James Harrington and John Locke wrote that men are entitled to a government by the people. Pamphlets, books and news paper articles also debated the good and bad features of government as it pertained to the North American Colonies. Even clerics got into the act, some supporting the colonists while others supported the king. Such heresy against the king landed James Harrington in prison where he died years later.
